The Ghost of Northumberland Strait By Lori Knutson

Chapter Nine – Responsive Journaling Questions:

1. “I miss it so bad, but it’s over. Gone. Kaput.” (page 80) Did you ever feel this way about a place you’ve left or maybe even about a time in your life that’s gone? If not, tell why you think you’ve avoided ever feeling this way.

2. “I’m sorry,” I mumble. “I’m sorry the shore makes you sad, and I’m sorry your baby died.” Charly says this to Katherine on page 81. Have you ever had to give your condolences to someone or try to comfort them when they were very sad? If not, what do you think this experience would be like?

3. “She smiles at me, and I can’t believe she’s not alive.” (page 81) In this novel, I’ve written Katherine to be solid – not ethereal. What do you think? If ghosts are real, are they solid beings or can you put your hand right through them? Why do you think this?
